ON THE COVER

Randy Flaum is a documentary photographer covering events and people from York County. He moved to York, Pennsylvania, in 2000 as the photography editor for The York Dispatch. His career began in Connecticut covering stories throughout that state. Since retiring from The Dispatch five years ago, Flaum has been telling visual stories from local events and the people who make up York County. The photo on the cover was taken by Flaum at a fundraising event in York. Everyone was creating large bubbles as sunset arrived.

OLLI at Penn State York has a Facebook page that is regularly updated.

MESSAGE FROM THE DIRECTOR

I hope the arrival of this catalog in your mailbox was a pleasant surprise. As you know, we moved to an online catalog during COVID-19. Most OLLIs across the country are continuing this practice. Online catalogs save natural resources and are more fiscally responsible. However, OLLI at Penn State York's Leadership Committee and I believe that a majority of our members appreciate a hand-held catalog that they can put on their coffee table or share with a friend. Therefore, our Development Committee worked diligently to get local sponsors for our catalog, to ease the burden of this expense on OLLI. Please thank our Development Committee members and the businesses and organizations in this catalog for bringing this catalog back into your hands.

Enjoy the catalog, I hope that many of the ninety-two in-person and eight Zoom courses pique your interest. See you in March!

Cordially,
Jennifer Geubtner-May, Ed.D.

MEN, WOMEN, AND WAR

War has traditionally been thought of as man's business. Yet, the experience of history shows that war has involved both men and women as active participants. World War I and II, and recent conflicts such as civil wars in Rwanda, the Balkans, and Afghanistan, demonstrate that warfare is not a matter of men going to battle to protect women, as women became involved in the war effort as mothers, workers, military personnel, combatants, and victims of warfare on civilians. This course will introduce students to issues related to the roles of women and men in war.

MOGULS AND MOVIE STARS EPISODE 7: FADE OUT, FADE IN (1960-1969)

The last episode of the series covers what was basically the death of the old Hollywood system. Most of the moguls had either died or been forced out of the companies they started. Power shifted to directors and a few other individuals, such as agent Lew Wasserman, who is covered extensively in episode seven. The 1960s also marked another huge landmark in American cinema, the abolishment of the Hays Code, which had restricted movie content for decades. These factors, along with a new appreciation for foreign films, lead to what is now commonly called New Hollywood.

EVERYBODY – NO, EVERYTHING – ON EARTH FIGHTS

Sad to say, but combat is built into the very structure of our world. It's easy to admit that animals fight - you can see that in photos and in real life. What is little thought about is that plants also fight (compete) for nutrients and light, water, space, and pollinators. The hymn Let There be Peace on Earth is pure fantasy. The main problem, however, lies squarely with human beings. Internal battles cause sleepless nights. Triggers make us mad automatically. Your style of fighting matters. Is I'm sorry enough? Let's discover how to best handle conflicts on the job, at dinner, or in the bar.

MONOGAMY, SEX, WAR AND MORE: IS THERE A NATURAL HUMAN BEHAVIOR?

Join us for a provocative, mind-expanding look at the things that we unconsciously assume to be universally true. We'll explore how the natural way for humans to behave may in fact be only a product our unconscious incorporation of a culture responding to human invention—as an example, the development of agriculture. Assumptions that we make about the certitude and inevitability of monogamy, gender roles, gender equity, armed conflict may not be either certain or inevitable. Based on the writings of Yuval Noah Harari, Esther Perel, Christopher Ryan, Cacilda Jetha, and others.

This film is a vivid and accurate reconstruction of a debating class at the small, historically black Wiley College in Texas. Professor Melvin B. Tolson attempts to put his students on an equal footing with the white colleges in the 1930s of Jim Crow laws and lynch mobs. It gives courage to us for today.

Imagine what those inquires might look like: What will you do when your health fails? Who will help you with transportation when you can no longer drive? If your spouse were diagnosed with dementia, how would you manage? What are the assisted living facility options in your community? Are your legal affairs in order? Too often, the need becomes a reality in a moment of crisis—after a fall at home, a minor car accident, or soon after receiving a debilitating medical diagnosis. CAN THERE BE A DUST BOWL 2.0?

This course explores a modern ecological disaster, the Dust Bowl of the 1930s, the setting of John Steinbeck's Grapes of Wrath as a man-made catastrophe. Did it stem from bad agricultural methods? Was it fueled by the passage of the Homestead Act by Congress on May 20, 1862? Did the creation of the homesteads play a role in whipping up this odd aerial phenomenon? It began with a prolonged drought. Today, nearly half of the land mass of the contiguous United States, forty-seven percent, is experiencing drought. Could we be creating conditions for a Dust Bowl 2.0 in the near future?

FRIDAY COURSES

ACCELERATED MATURATION OF DISTILLED BROWN BEVERAGES

Beverages such as whiskey, rum, brandy, tequila, and others are put in oak barrels to age after they have been distilled. The aging process takes two to several years depending on the beverage. During this period, the product mellows, changes color, and becomes softer to drink. The accelerated method of maturation cuts that time to about 120 days for most of the beverages without compromising the character and taste of the product. The details of the process will be presented.

While rebuilding a Victorian house at home, he worked in machine shops, manufacturing and then thirty years of railroading. Also, he and his wife both ran non-profits in their spare time. So, while feeding people on the street, he noticed kids with brakeless bikes and Recycle Bicycle was born. After twenty years, it went from his yard to a 9,000 square-foot warehouse.
